Resources for Working with English Learners

Best Practice for ELLs: Peer-Assisted Learning

“Teachers of English learners should devote approximately 90 minutes/week to instructional activities in which pairs of students at different ability levels or proficiencies work together on academic tasks.” Read about the strong evidence supporting this concept and strategies to make it happen. Culturally Responsive Classroom Management Strategies

“Culturally Responsive Classroom Management (CRCM) is an approach to running classrooms with all children in a culturally responsive way. It is a pedagogical approach that guides the management decisions teachers make . . . Teachers recognize their biases and values and reflect on how these influence their expectations for behavior and their interactions with students.” This brief from the Metropolitan Center for Urban Education identifies the essential elements of CRCM and provides teaching strategies to carry out the elements.
